Circa Opus

Wednesday, April 25, 7:30 pm

Opus, which is underpinned by the music of composer Dmitri Shostakovich, features fourteen acrobats creating powerful and nuanced geometries with their bodies. The performers are joined on stage by the Debussy String Quartet, and the musicians' contributions are far more than simply playing the music. Delving deeply into the complex relationships between the individual and the group, the march of history and the dictates of the heart, and the tragic and the comic, Opus is an evening of circus that eschews the zany for the thought-provoking.

LV encourages community members, including candidates for office, to submit letters to Editor@LittleVillageMag.com. ## The Meaning of Community

One of our patients recently wrote: "I am 58 years old, born outside the United States and an American citizen. I've had wonderful times as well as plain scary times in my years in America. It is an amazing feeling to know that even during the times I didn't have insurance, my basic health would be OK, because the Iowa City Free Clinic was here. It gives me a feeling of dignity to have access to health care. Thank you all for the help, throughout the years."

Since 1971, the Iowa City Free Medical and Dental Clinic has worked hard to represent the best qualities of our community: dignity, kindness, respect and the willingness to work together to make things better for others. For 47 years, people living and working in our community have come together to provide assistance for our friends and neighbors in need of medical and dental assistance.

The Free Clinic's partnerships are many: Our organization works with Johnson County, the Cities of Iowa City and Coralville and the United Way. Our partnerships with UIHC and Mercy Hospital are integral to our successful operation. Local service groups and area churches generously support the clinic. Area businesses also provide much needed assistance.

Our most recently formed partnership is with the University of Iowa College of Nursing. Through grant funding, the Free Clinic now has a regularly scheduled Nurse Practitioner Clinic and has hired a part-time nurse practitioner. The College of Nursing is partnering in this endeavor by paying a portion of the nurse practitioner's salary. This new clinic will focus on the Free Clinic's mission, "to provide quality, comprehensive healthcare for the uninsured and underinsured in Johnson County and surrounding areas," while at the same time providing a training environment for nurse practitioner students.

Last year, the clinic received over 1.3 million dollars of in-kind patient services, including labs, medications, radiology procedures and medical supplies. Hundreds of volunteers selflessly donated their time and skills. Because our community works together, the clinic holds six weekly medical clinics and six to 12 monthly dental clinics. We also provide specialty care including gynecology, ophthalmology, dermatology and physical therapy.

The Iowa City Free Clinic is one of the longest running free clinics in the United States. We are here today because of our many diverse, rich, long-standing and evolving partnerships. I am extremely proud to be a part of such a community. LV/

'Death by a thousand cuts': University Camera is closing after 48 years

Roger Christian is an exemplar of the best that small businesses offer every day to local consumers. It is sad to see such establishments close because such events diminish consumer experiences more than can be measured in the short term. It is not just about camera stores or photography; it is about the trusting relationships and extra value offered every day that cannot be replicated by sterile online shopping carts or warehouse clubs with tall shelves that are short on customer service.

As a professor of marketing I recognize there are many factors that affect such businesses and the consumers they once served, but I nonetheless regret the loss of these invaluable resources that communities often fail to appreciate until they are gone. Millennials may never miss that which they never realized, but there are many who owe a debt of thanks for the unheralded acts of selflessness and community service such local businesses consistently offered.

Thank you Roger for your contributions to your local townspeople and families, to your industry, and to your colleagues. Many in the industry salute you for a job well done.

Happy trails ahead. Good job!
—Robert B.

Thank you Roger for all your help in keeping the Recreation Division Darkroom running. When I came on board in 1980 I had no idea what the inside of a darkroom looked like, but with your help and guidance, incredible black and white art was produced daily by citizens of Iowa City. Yes, we eventually had to close our darkroom too, just a few years back, but you have left so many with the fondest of memories. I know you will miss the store, the people and being downtown everyday but you deserve some time for yourself now. Go. Be free. Have some fun. It's been an honor, sir. —Joyce C.

TWO PATHS TO IOWA CITY

Wrestling and literature collide with world politics in Iowa City. • BY PAUL BRENNAN

It's not surprising that Iowa City is hosting an international literary conference and an international wrestling championship in the same week. After all, Iowa City has been a literary center for 70 years, and Iowa has been a leader in wrestling since the days of disorganized catch-as-catch-can matches in the 19th century. What is surprising is which of these events is embroiled in international controversy.

Normally, bringing together representatives from the 28 UNESCO Cities of Literature might seem likely to produce political sparks—especially with Donald Trump in the White House—but it's the United World Wrestling (UWW) Freestyle World Cup that's been the focus of international controversy.

That not to say the UNESCO Cities of Literature meeting is completely free of political considerations. There is a Trump-shaped cloud hanging over the conference.

In October, President Trump announced status yet, and hopefully won't. But that isn't clear, even though the other Cities of Literature have been supportive.

"My phone rang off the hook, my email was jammed, my text messages were pinging every few seconds that day [when the withdrawal was announced]," Kenyon said. "Not only from people internationally, but also from a lot of local people, who were concerned."

The Iowa City meeting had already been scheduled before the withdraw-he was withdrawing the United States from UNESCO (the United Nations Education, Scientific and Cultural Organization). According to Iowa City UNESCO City of Literature Executive Director John Kenyon, that decision hasn't affected Iowa City's al announcement in October—Iowa City was selected as the host, in part, to mark its 10th anniversary as a UNESCO City of Literature—but Kenyon said the Trump administration move was the cherry on top.

"It certainly gave us additional motivation that we wanted to show to everyone that there is a strong connection between Iowa City and UNESCO and the rest of the world, regardless of what is coming out of Washington,” Kenyon said.

But the concerns shadowing the meeting of representatives from the 28 cities pale compared to what has been happening with the Freestyle World Cup.

First, Iran, the defending team champion, dropped out. Iran has been a target of increasingly bellicose rhetoric from the Trump administration as well as new visa restriction on its citizens seeking to enter the U.S., but according Iran’s official news agency, the team dropped out due to a “scheduling conflict.” UWW, the governing body for international amateur and Olympic wrestling competitions, has not publicly commented on Iran’s withdrawal beyond announcing India had been invited to fill the tournament’s empty slot.

Then nine days before the first match on April 7, Russia announced it might not be sending its national team. The Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs claimed the U.S. was deliberately making it difficult for its team to get visas in retaliation for Russia ordering the expulsion of 60 American diplomats. That order came in response to the U.S. ordering the expulsion of 60 Russian diplomats in response to Russian involvement in the poisoning of a former Russian spy and his daughter in the United Kingdom.

USA Wrestling, UWW’s national affiliate, asked Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) to look into the visa problem. Two days after the Russian complaint, USA Wrestling announced Russia had been dropped from the tournament’s roster.

In its announcement, USA Wrestling quoted from a statement it received from Grassley’s office: “Due to the staffing reduction forced on the U.S. Mission in Russia by the Russian Federation, there is very limited appointment availability for visa interviews at this time. In the current situation, the Embassy is not able to provide expedited appointments for sporting events.”

UWW invited Mongolia to take Russia’s place.

The visa row echoes a controversy at the 2017 Freestyle World Cup. Then it was the American team having visa difficulty.

The 2017 championship was held in Iran, just weeks after President Trump imposed his first travel ban, preventing people from seven predominantly Muslim countries—including Iran—from entering the United States.

The Iranian government relented, and the Americans were able to participate (the team finished in second place). The Americans reported having a great time in Iran (“This was the best tournament I have ever participated in, even better than the Olympics in Rio,” a member of the team told The New York Times) and were impressed by how enthusiastic and knowledgeable about international wrestling average Iranians were (“In America we are misfits. In Iran we are heroes, so it is really cool to see,” another team member told CNN).

The Americans came away from the 2017 tournament with a very different impression of Iran than the image of unsmiling mullahs and angry militants that is the mental picture of Iran for most Americans. And that was the point of letting the American team participate.

Since the 1990s, Iran has made sports a focus of outreach to countries with which it wants to improve relations.

“Sport is a gigantic and powerful medium for the international spread of information, reputations and relationships that are the essence of public diplomacy,” said Barry Sanders, author of American Avatar: The United States in the Global Imagination. Public diplomacy isn’t aimed at negotiating treaties or trade deals, it tries to create a positive image of a country.

Wrestling is an obvious choice for Iranian public diplomacy. It’s considered the national sport. There’s a long tradition of Iran producing great wrestlers, and its citizens really do follow international wrestling with an enthusiasm seldom seen in the U.S.

“For a smaller country like Iran, it does make sense to use sports as a form of public diplomacy,” Sanders said. “But for America any public image produced event like the [Freestyle World Cup] wouldn’t have much impact in other countries.”

That’s because people around the world already have a clear image of America in their heads, as Sanders pointed out. Some of those images are almost utopian, many aren’t.

“The general attitude about America, going back to the earliest days of the country, would be that we’re a place where ignorance is plentiful, that we are not a place you look to for literature,” Sanders said.

That makes Iowa City, with its a long-established international literary reputation, something of an anomaly.

“I tell people we were a city of literature before UNESCO gave us that designation,” Kenyon said. That reputation, of course, is based on it being the home of the Iowa Writers’ Workshop.

“Before I came to Iowa City to teach in 1965 and ’66, I could name only three things I knew for sure about [Iowa]: Corn, pigs and the Writers’ Workshop,” Kurt Vonnegut wrote in 1991 following the death Paul Engle, the director of the workshop when it gained international prominence.

Founded at the University of Iowa in 1936, it was the first creative writing degree program in the U.S. In 1941, Engle, a poet and native of Cedar Rapids, became its second director.

Much has been written about Engle’s relationships with some of the great writers who were students or instructors at the workshop (Flannery O’Connor, Tennessee Williams, Vonnegut—to name three from a very long list), but less attention has been paid to the practical realities of administering and funding it.

In Workshops of Empire, a 2015 book on the creative programs at Stanford University and UI during the Cold War, Eric Bennett documents how Engle persuaded philanthropic foundations and even the U.S. government to support the Iowa Writers’ Workshop by presenting it as a way of refuting the commonly held image of the Midwest as a cultural and intellectual wasteland.

A 1959 sales pitch to Iowa business executives made by Engle when he was trying to raise money to bring international students to the workshop was typical of his approach.

“The young writer is not merely a student,” he wrote. “Far more than any other person of talent, he creates the image by which a country sees itself, and the image by which other countries also see it.” Engle went on to add, “It is important that these most articulate of all their generation should write and study far from both coasts, where foreign students tend to congregate. Here [in Iowa] they learn the essential America.”

In his book, Bennett includes the response Henry Hall, president of Iowa Manufacturing Company in Cedar Rapids (then the city’s largest employer), to this pitch. Hall was enthusiastic and liked the idea of international writing students becoming what he called, “cultural missionaries, taking the name of Iowa around the Free World.”

Engle’s approach to fundraising was very much in step with American public diplomacy during the Cold War. Demonstrating the country’s cultural and intellectual vibrancy was considered a priority, especially during the 1950s and ‘60s.

“This is the period in which the CIA was secretly funding the Paris Review, Partisan

Review and other literary efforts in a very aggressive secret effort to change the international image of America being a country without literary accomplishments,” Sanders noted.

Bennett was only able to find one example of CIA money going to the Iowa Writers’ Workshop. In 1967, the Fairfield Foundation, a front organization the CIA used to fund cultural activities, donated $7,000 to the workshop (the equivalent of $53,000 today).

Whatever the CIA officers hoped to accomplish with that donation, they certainly couldn’t have expected to have any influence over the workshop at the point. A year earlier, the poet George Starbuck succeeded Engle as director. Starbuck, described by a former workshop student as “one of the nation’s most articulate critics of the military/industrial complex,” was arrested at a protest against the Vietnam War at the Iowa Memorial Union the same year the CIA made its contribution. More importantly, Starbuck was one of six State University of New York faculty members to sue after being fired in 1963 for refusing to take a loyalty oath. The case made its way to the U.S. Supreme Court, which ruled that loyalty oaths were unconstitutional.

There was a short, loud controversy over the Cold War-related funding of the Iowa Writers’ Workshop when Workshops of Empire was published, but the government never controlled what went on in the workshop. And regardless of whatever the Trump administration decides to do about UNESCO, there’s very little it can do to diminish Iowa City’s reputation as a center of literature. LV/

Entering the Great Conversation

To gain a better understanding of the world, try dialogue with a tree.

BY THOMAS DEAN

Over two weekend days in March—during which we experienced the gamut of weather from cold to warmth to rain to ice to snow to frost to fog to sunshine—I joined a group of fellow travelers in a remarkable retreat at Prairiewoods in Hiawatha: “The Great Conversation:

Nature and the Care of the Soul” with Belden Lane, Professor Emeritus of Theological Studies at Saint Louis University and author of Backpacking with the Saints, The Solace of Fierce Landscapes, and Landscapes of the Sacred: Geography and Narrative in American Spirituality.

At no time in human history has there been a more urgent need for human conversation with nature. The devastating effects of climate change accelerate, poisons destroy nature’s gifts of life, species continue to decline and disappear at alarming rates—all due to humanity’s hubris and rampant consumption. When war occurs in the human world, the first step toward peace is always talking with each other. Even though the destruction of the natural world is a one-sided war, conversation is still essential. In our country’s polarized culture, some few people are beginning to converse as a way of healing divided communities. We need to extend the same efforts to the natural world.

At first it may sound a bit kooky to talk about “conversing” with nature. But the oddness of that idea is really due to the inadequacy of our words, even our human conceptions. What happens when entering the Great Conversation is much more profound than trading mere words, or even human ideas. When conversing with nature, trees and flowers and animals don’t actually say human words to you, though you may hear them in your mind if it helps your understanding. We speak with the natural world through intuition, feeling and sensing. The Great Conversation is about becoming more aware, of opening yourself to the understanding that Wordsworth’s world of “getting and spending” is too much with us, that we see little in nature that is ours, that we have given our hearts away, that we are out of tune, that what we need to do is open ourselves to what the natural world is saying.

that we need to be the students of that wisdom—we need to take that very difficult first step in conversation: to listen.

This is not an entirely mystical or New Age idea. Listening to plants is what earned cytogeneticist Barbara McClintock a Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine in 1983. As Linda Hogan says in Dwellings: A Spiritual History of the Living World regarding McClintock’s work on gene transposition in corn plants, “Her method was to listen to what corn had to say, to translate what the plants spoke into a human tongue.” McClintock “came to know each plant intimately. She watched the daily green journeys of their growth from earth toward sky and sun ... Her approach to her science was alive, intuitive, and humane ... Her respect for life allowed for a vision expanded enough, and sharp enough, to see more deeply into the mysteries of matter than did other geneticists who were at work on the same ... She saw an alive world, a fire of life inside plants.” McClintock herself said that we must “hear what the material has to say to you. One must have a feeling for the organism.”

The first step in entering the Great Conversation is to find a teacher, as Belden Lane says. For Lane, aside from the fierce landscapes where he has sought to find wilderness teachers in his backpacking trips, the most important wise elder has been an old cottonwood tree in a city park across the street from his home in St. Louis. Lane calls the cottonwood Grandfather, and they have been conversing for 25 years. Lane has shared life tragedies with Grandfather, who has suffered a huge gash in his trunk thanks to a lightning strike, huddled in the hollow of his wound. He has slept in his highest branches, learned all he can about the family of cottonwoods and talked with him every day. The most important teacher is right here at home. As Lane often says, referencing the saints and other world spiritual sages he admires and studies, mystery is embedded in the ordinary.

In our retreat, one of our most important tasks was to find a teacher—to explore the prairies and woods of this home for eco-spirituality at the edge of Cedar Rapids and to listen for an invitation. For me, that teacher was a small oak savanna—a council of six white swamp oaks residing on a slight rise on the prairie. I was not surprised. I am inevitably drawn to this family of trees whenever I visit Prairiewoods and always leave with photographs of it. The prairie had been burned this spring, so approaching and entering the circle of oaks was easy. More difficult was humbling myself to this family of beings, listening to them attentively and understanding what they were trying to tell me.

It was barely a start at a conversation, but in the span of an hour, I heard gratitude for the life-giving fire Prairiewoods' staff had given to the oaks' companions—soil and plants beneath and beyond its canopy of branches. I heard an invitation to touch one of the tree's rough, hard trunk, to close my eyes and to feel the turning of the earth. I heard the trees' message of grounded family and relationships. I heard their plea to stop cutting and poisoning, which has made the oak savanna an even more endangered landscape in our state than the prairie itself. And I heard an invitation to return, with the savanna's promise to always be there.

The deeper we enter the world's mystery and the more profoundly we engage in the Great Conversation, the deeper our relationship with nature grows, and the more we are open to the teachings we need from it and the more we comprehend its needs from us. For Lane, that is what love is, and it is only this love that will save the world. As April brings the cycle of new life sprouting from the soil, it is a perfect time to seek an invitation to the Great Conversation. LV/

Mi descubrimiento de América

En alguna parte entre Iowa City y Cartagena, una escritora encuentra su sentido de pertenencia a América Latina.

POR LOLITA COPACABANA

Las playas de Uruguay, una escapada al sur de Brasil, y a los diecisiete cruzar los Andes para una aventura todo terreno. Las sutiles diferencias en el castellano de una y otra orilla del río más ancho de todos, una foto al Cristo Redentor, glaciares patagónicos, recuerdos de caipirinha y de pisco sour.

Desde mi casa en Iowa City, en la intersección de

Washington y Dodge street, leo postales exóticas del fin del mundo.

Pero Buenos Aires, mi ciudad-puerto al sur del sur, a 9.124 kilómetros de la ciudad literaria que hoy me aloja es, en muchos sentidos, dueña de una “espléndida separación” del resto de Latinoamérica: al punto en que a veces los argentinos, y en especial los porteños, al estar tan abajo en el mapa, tan apartados por cordilleras, ríos inmensos y las inhabitadas pampas que nos rodean, nos quedamos un poco aislados de las realidades de nuestro continente.

Antes de dejar Buenos Aires tuve un presentimiento: quizás un porteño no terminase de asumir su condición de latinoamericano hasta que le tocara partir.

El proceso fue consolidándose en la universidad. Hasta entonces no me había tocado enseñar y ahora dos cursos de alumnos me miraban ansiosos para que les develara los misterios de mi idioma materno, el español. Ese primer semestre tomé una materia en clave pedagógica que me ayudó, y en una primera versión de mi filosofía de enseñanza me sorprendí consciente de que para mis alumnos mi rol era el de representante de las culturas hispánicas en general, un rol de gran responsabilidad que afectaría la relación que mantuvieran con estas a lo largo de su vida toda.

Para mis alumnos mi rol era el de representante de las culturas hispánicas en general.

Pero lo determinante me llegó en Colombia, en enero, en el curso de un festival literario que se realizó en Cartagena, a donde fui invitada junto con otros 38 jóvenes escritores latinoamericanos. Ahí, empapada de mar y humedad, abrazada por las murallas de la ciudad multicolor, entre cócteles y mesas y lecturas y fiestas, en piletas y ascensores y en filas para el almuerzo, creí escuchar, al fin, el murmullo de un posible futuro literario para mi continente. Me sonreí por lo bajo, y desde mi adolescencia la brisa trajo recuerdos de voces que creía enterradas: la arenga decidida de Rodó, las seductoras promesas de Martí—slogans vacíos que, en contexto, se llenaron de sentido.

En los aviones de vuelta leí la antología de nuevas voces que fue resultado del encuentro, libro que va a publicarse, en el curso de 2018, en no menos de catorce países. Me enteré, ahí, del día en que un joven reportero fue a cubrir el lanzamiento de una novela de Orwell en La Habana. Reí con las aventuras a 30.000 pies de un matrimonio mexicano en disolución. Me preocupé por el embarazo adolescente de una niña portorriqueña. Me maravillé con el día en que un poeta de Santo Domingo conoció la nieve. Entendí las formas en las que una infancia en

Argentina y Perú podían ser parecidas. Y me pareció que si el ser latinoamericano era un destino también, en igual medida, conformaba un devenir. Y en tanto nos seguí leyendo, mientras avanzaba entre las nubes, construí castillos, fortalezas grandes como un continente entero en el cielo tan alto, y nos vi avanzar tan rápido, arremangados, hacia el futuro—y también creí. ## My Discovery of America

Somewhere between Iowa City and Cartagena, a writer finds her sense of belonging to Latin America.

BY LOLITA COPACABANA, TRANSLATED BY JENNIFER SHYUE

The beaches of Uruguay, a getaway to southern Brazil, crossing the Andes at 17 for an off-road adventure. The subtle differences in the Spanish spoken on either side of the widest of all rivers, a photo of Christ the Redeemer, Patagonian glaciers, memories of caipirinhas and pisco sours.

In my house in Iowa City at the intersection of Washington and Dodge streets, these dispatches from the end of the world seem exotic. But Buenos Aires, my farther-south-than-south port city 9,124 kilometers from this literary city that's taken me in is, in many ways, the site of a "splendid separation" from the rest of Latin America—to the point that sometimes, finding ourselves so far down the map, so distant from the mountain ranges, vast rivers and unpopulated pampas that surround us, Argentines (especially porteños, those of us from Buenos Aires) end up a little isolated from our continent's realities.

Before my departure I had a premonition: Maybe porteños don't fully acquire status as Latin Americans until we leave.

That process gained momentum when I arrived at the University of Iowa. Until that point I'd never been a teacher, and now two classes of students were waiting eagerly for me to unlock the mysteries of my mother tongue, Spanish. That first semester, I took a helpful pedagogy class, and in a preliminary version of my teaching philosophy I was surprised to find an awareness of the fact that, for my students, I was a representative of Hispanic cultures as a whole. It was a role with a lot of responsibility, one that would influence my students' relationships with said cultures for the rest of their lives.

But the decisive moment came in January, during a literary festival taking place in Cartagena, Colombia to which I, along with 38 other young Latin American writers, had been invited. There, soaked through with sea and humidity, in the embrace of the walls of a multicolored city, between cocktails and roundtables and readings and parties, in pools and elevators and lines for lunch, I thought I heard, at last, the whispers of a possible literary future for my continent. I smiled to myself, and a breeze brought from my adolescence memories of voices I'd thought long buried: the unflinching exhortations of Rodó, the seductive promises of Martí—empty slogans that, once contextualized, were full of meaning.

On the flights back, I read the anthology of new voices that had emerged from of the festival; over the course of 2018, the book will be published in no fewer than 14 countries. Reading, I found out about the day a young reporter went to cover the launch of an Orwell novel in Havana; laughed at the mile-high adventures of a Mexican couple in a disintegrating marriage; worried about a Puerto Rican girl's teen pregnancy; marveled when a poet from Santo Domingo experienced snow for the first time. I saw the ways in which childhood in Argentina and Peru might be similar. And it seemed to me that if being Latin American was our destiny, it was also turning out to be, in equal measure, a process of becoming. And as I kept reading our book, as I moved forward among the clouds, I built castles, fortresses big as an entire continent up high in the sky, and I saw us moving quickly forward, sleeves rolled up, toward the future. And I believed. LV/

WEARING YOUR IDENTITY

University of Iowa students and Walk it Out Multicultural Fashion Show leaders Ala Mohamed and Jocelyn Pai combine East Asian style with their own fashion sensibilities to present a confident but culturally-rich look.

BY EMMA MCCLATCHY

Ala Mohamed

Ala Mohamed calls herself observant. Her wardrobe is based on the styles that have caught her eye over the years: cultural clothing from Sudan, where she was born; fashion spreads in West Side Story, the student newspaper at her alma mater, Iowa City West High; East Asian fashions sported by Chinese students at the University of Iowa; fashion tips from blogs run by hijabi (Muslim women) and much more.

"I know the whole point is 'Oh, don't be a follower; be your own person.' But sometimes it's OK to follow someone else, you know?" Mohamed said. "If that person inspires you to do something or be better or try something new, I think it's a good idea."

"Sometimes it's OK to follow someone else. If that person inspires you to do something or be better or try something new, I think it's a good idea."

—Ala Mohamed

A freshman business and Chinese major at UI, Mohamed is also the head choreographer for the 2018 Walk it Out Fashion Show and vice president of Brand You, a largely Instagram-based fashion and media organization.

Mohamed likes to shop thrift stores like Plato's Closet, where she used to work, and Goodwill. She gravitates towards Topshop, ASOS, Nikes, Jordans and "simple" garments from Forever 21, such as orange bomber jackets and fishnet bodysuits. She loves black and sports a "street style" while observing Muslim modesty.

"I am always trying to find ways to come back to my culture, a way to [combine] modernized clothing styles with cultural clothing."

"I try to stay as modest as I can while trying to explore my fashion senses," she said. "Some people judge you just based on what you wear, or what you have on your head. A lot of people would be like, 'Oh, she's dressed like a Muslim.' But then if I actually express myself with my fashion it becomes, 'Oh, she's got style.'"

Walk It Out Fashion Show

Iowa Memorial Union,

Saturday, April 7, 6 p.m., $10-15

Mohamed will present a poem at the Walk it Out show, which will focus on worldwide activism. She plans to live in China one day and work in the fashion industry. While at UI, she hopes to see Iowa City fashion better represented on social media, especially cultural fashion.

"It's very daring," she said of wearing your identity. "I just want to show people no matter your faith, no matter your background, you always have a home in fashion and fashion can always be there for you."

Jocelyn Pai

Jocelyn Pai's friends call her suave, a classification she doesn't quite accept. She would label her look "tom-boy-ish," "lesbian-ish" and K-Pop-inspired—but she sort of gets where the "suave" tag comes from.

"It's a look and how you act with the clothing you wear, right? I have that trait and portray it very well, I guess," said the UI senior. "When we go out, I would have a nice shirt, nice pants, nice shoes—head to toe. I take it quite seriously."

Pai lives for a crisp, button-up shirt. When she has the money to shop—"My style is kind of up there, so I save up money and then go."—she'll head to Express or browse Asian retailers online.

"I have a really, classy side, and I'm a hockey player so there's an athletic side and a comfortable sweatpants side," she said. "You know how when professional players go to games, they're all dressed up? Definitely like that. Me being a Leo helps, but we're so egocentric."

Pai was born in New York but grew up in Taiwan, where she first started playing hockey (she currently competes with UI's intramural hockey team). She was drawn to Iowa for the UI biology program, but switched to studying human physiology with a minor in American Sign Language. She plans to return to New York to be closer to family after graduation.

Though Pai adopted some of the chicness of New York City fashion, she said her style was formed while living in Asia. K-Pop is her primary inspiration, though K-Pop stars' skin-tight jeans are not always compatible with a hockey player's muscular build.

Like her roles in Walk it Out—she's been a model for the LGBTQ group and is now leader of the East Asian team—Pai's style doesn't fit in a single category.

"If you look at the Chinese, Korean or Japanese traditional outfits, they're glamorous and elegant. When men and women put them on, they're a different spectrum of beautiful. But I think LGBTQ style is more free.

There's a huge range of fashion in LGBTQ itself. Being a lesbian definitely leans me towards LGBTQ. Look at Ruby Rose—wow. Look at Ellen DeGeneres. Like that."

"I'm in the middle," she said.

It is said that the ancient Greek language had seven words for love. There's eros for sexual passion, philia for friendship, ludus for playful love, pragma for love that endures, philautia for self-love, storge for kinship and—perhaps the most radical of them all—agape: love that expects nothing in return.

Iowa City's Agape Café proves true to name. Since 1993, the café, located in Old Brick Church on Market Street, has been serving free, restaurant-style, made-to-order breakfast to the Iowa City community on Wednesday mornings, 7 to 8:30 a.m.

Anyone can come to Agape Café, says Maja Black, the café's kitchen manager.

"Many of our patrons are our in-need neighbors, and it's important to us that everyone is treated with the same respect and dignity," she said. "We serve restaurant-style breakfast for that reason, so everyone can order exactly what they want in a peaceful environment."

Café-goers order from a menu of classic breakfast items—eggs any style, toast, fresh fruit, bacon, potatoes and orange juice—to accompany their main dish. Depending on the week, this might be something sweet, like pancakes or French toast, or something savory, like the biscuits and gravy I ordered.

"We've served over 100 [people] in a single morning," said Black of her handful of volunteer servers and kitchen staff. "And it's amazing that such a beautiful, free breakfast has been running on almost entirely volunteer work."

Not in a Hurry

Built to Spill: still chill. • BY KEMBREW MCLEOD

When I first moved Iowa City in 2000, an alarming number of Los Angeles- and New York-based music publicists tried to cajole me into seeing artists who were playing in Boise, Idaho. The first time this happened, I assumed they were joking about confusing Des Moines with Boise, home to Built to Spill, but it was only I who wound up cracking wise (pointing out that no band was worth a 1,500-mile road trip, though I'd be happy to receive a first-class plane ticket).

Given that both Iowa and Idaho are so far off the coastal radars, which overlook their thriving cultural scenes, Built to Spill's headlining appearance at Mission Creek Festival fits like a glove. Everything about singer-guitarist

Doug Martsch and his longtime band is unassuming and undramatic—from the two decades of major-label albums they've steadily released as the music industry collapsed around them to the lilting melodies and long, winding solos that weep gently from Martsch's guitar.

Built to Spill has distinguished itself with a quarter century of consistent record-making: no wild stylistic turns and no off-brand collaborations with fancy production people or song doctors (a la Weezer, Liz Phair, Fall Out Boy). Martsch's lyrics are impressionistic but emotionally direct, like the following moment from their 1994 classic, There is Nothing Wrong with Love, during "Twin Falls":

Christmas, Twin Falls, Idaho is her oldest memory
She was only two
It was the first time she felt blue

Cafeteria, Harrison Elementary
Beneath a parachute
I saw her without shoes
7UP I touched her thumb and she knew it was me

Living in Twin Falls as a kid, Martsch loved music and listened to the radio all the time—though there wasn't much to do in his hometown, and the only record stores were corporate retailers like Musicland.

"In junior high school I spent all my allowance money on cassettes," he said. "I had a friend, Brett Nelson, who played in Built to Spill for a long time, and he was a musician. He had a synthesizer and I was pretty into that, and my brother and sister, who were six and eight years older than me, they played guitar a little bit. There was an acoustic guitar around and every now and then I would mess around with it, but it wasn't anything serious."

About a month before Martsch entered high school, a new world opened up for him after he moved to Boise ("My mom's good, she got me out of Twin Falls, Idaho/before I got too old/you know how that goes," he also sang in "Twin Falls"). He didn't know anyone in that city, so Martsch took this as an opportunity to learn some chords on the guitar, and his interest grew more intense.

"That was how I got started playing music," he said. "Brett Nelson still lived in Twin Falls after I moved to Boise, but we remained best friends, and we would visit each other over a few months and write songs together." Martsch, Nelson and drummer Andy Capps formed a thrashy high school band, Farm Days, which was the same lineup that later played on There Is Nothing Wrong With Love. "It was rawer—faster, more punk rock and even stupider," he said. "That was the main difference."

"Growing up in Boise was nice," Martsch continued, "because there was enough going on so that it wasn't boring, but it wasn't overwhelming either. When there was a good band that came to town, it was a special occasion. And there was a really great independent record store, Record Exchange, that is still there today—which was really important. I hung out there all the time because it was just a couple blocks from where I lived in Boise, and there was a guy who worked there who took me under his wing and introduced me to a lot of cool music."

This led Martsch to join Treepeople, which moved to Seattle just as the Pacific Northwest music scene was revving into high gear. After releasing several seven-inches and a couple EPs and full-length records, they called it quits and Martsch moved back to Boise. He formed Built to Spill in 1992 after reuniting with bassist Brett Nelson, debuting with 1993's Ultimate Alternative Wavers, and has remained tethered to the place ever since.

"It's just cheaper to live here," he said, "and more than that, it's just where we ended up being. We bought a house there and our son went to school there, so we just put down roots. It's still an affordable place."

This has allowed Martsch to continue Built to Spill in his own low-key way, releasing a record every few years and occasionally going out on tour.

Martsch said the band is working on a few new songs—we might hear one or two during their Mission Creek Festival appearance at the Englert—but Built to Spill is in no rush to record a new album. Unbothered by regimented release schedules and other music biz constrictions, the band continues to rock on in its own unhurried way. LV

Express Youssef

Once Egypt's most subversive political comedian, Bassem Youssef is taking on Trump's America. • BY DAN BOSCALJON

Coudia Refaat

Media outlets tend to tout Bassem Youssef as “the Egyptian Jon Stewart,” due to the popularity of his political satire in Egypt (the fact that both men are strong-jawed and bright-eyed, with trim, grey hair—and that they are friends—only bolsters this comparison). Yet whereas Stewart got into the comedy business through comedy, Youssef’s rise to prominence came through a more circuitous route: political revolution.

“I’ve always been following satire and comedy as a viewer,” Youssef said, in a recent Little Village interview, “but I never thought I’d be someone producing or doing it ... You don’t think there’s hope you can do it.

When the [2010-11 Arab Spring] revolution came, it opened a whole new window for everybody.”

Youssef’s original field was medicine. He completed training as a cardiothoracic surgeon at Cairo University in 1998, received additional training in heart and lung transplants in Germany, and worked for a year in the U.S. for a company that manufactures medical supplies for heart and lung transplants. Medicine required him to work “hard, very long hours,” which he credits for helping him get his show off the ground.

“It makes you a perfectionist—even if it isn’t something you’ve done before,” Youssef said of his medical career. “You learn it and stay at it until you get it.”

His entry into political work began in 2011, as he tended to the wounded in Cairo’s

Tahrir Square after the military had attended to an otherwise peaceful protest. Frustrated by the largely pro-government media coverage of Egyptian politics, Youssef began his first production, The B+ Show—named for his blood type; not a representation of the show’s quality—which provided five-minute YouTube clips of what became his trademark political satire, filmed from his laundry room.

This led him to helming Al-Bernameg (The Program) on Egypt’s channel ONTV, which translated into a second contract for the show on CBC—a larger platform that allowed Youssef the honor of hosting Egypt’s first show filmed before a live studio audience. However, Youssef’s humor (including an unaired show about CBC itself, a freedom-of-speech play that backfired when the station refused to air the episode) became increasingly dangerous in Egypt’s volatile political landscape.

"We were [confronting] different political dilemmas in the years that followed the Arab Spring," he said, referring to the revolving door of leadership in Egyptian politics. "Dealing with the regimes—the military regime is more sacred than religion, it was more popular, they could be more powerful in stopping people and people will accept it."

At one point, he was prosecuted by the office of then-President Morsi for promoting "fake news" that might adversely affect the administration. After a 2013 coup toppled Morsi, Youssef began a third season of his program—but once again met with resistance from CBC, which opted to stop broadcasting the show. He found a new outlet—MBC, a satellite channel, where his next 11 episodes were met with massive weekly audiences, before he decided to terminate the program during the 2014 election, fearing for his and his family's safety.

Although his shows continue to draw large audiences on the internet, Youssef is now an American comedian based in Los Angeles, where he lives with his wife and two children. He's written a book, Revolution for Dummies: Laughing through the Arab Spring, and was featured in the 2016 documentary Tickling Giants. He currently has a show on news and satire channel Fusion, Democracy Handbook, which provides a series of short, funny examinations of the U.S. through the lens of an Arab immigrant.

Acclimating to America has required a large amount of transition. In Egypt he found that he was relevant and relatable to his audiences. In the U.S., however, Youssef said, "I'm a fish out of water ... As an Arab, I'm looked at with suspicion, especially under Trump. That gives my comedy a different flavor."

He tries to use this perspective to his advantage, seeing himself as "a spectator trying to get my show on the air;" a representative of Middle Eastern Arabs who have difficulty getting heard in contemporary America. But adapting to a new American audience has

THEATRE & PERFORMANCE

Feathers of Fire: A Persian Epic Hancher, Iowa City, Wednesday, April 4, 7:30 p.m., $10-40 Drawn from the 10th-century Persian epic Shahnameh (The Book of Kings), Feathers of Fire is a masterful shadow play built through a combination of puppetry, masks, animation and more. The tale of Zaul and Rudabeh is brought to life by filmmaker and visual artist (and 2014 Guggenheim scholar) Hamid Rahmanian. The show features an original score by Loga Ramin Torkian and Azam Ali, and premiered in 2016 at the Brooklyn Academy of music. Although Zaul and Rudabeh are referred to as "star-crossed" lovers in many of the materials for the show, the stars actually land in their favor: Zaul's father, who initially disapproves of their union, eventually allows it because a reading of the stars said their offspring would conquer the world.

required Youssef to change in a number of ways. The transition has meant turning his focus from problems in Egypt to ones in the U.S.

Although this has disappointed some of his fans in Egypt, Youssef takes it in stride.

"I have done all I can as an Egyptian. Right now, I'm an immigrant in America. I cannot seriously speak to Egypt—I left almost four years ago. Speaking from the outside—I don't think it's a good idea. I still speak, but only toward my new reality."

In addition to a different set of issues to address, Youssef has also studied how to communicate to his new audience, which requires more than just different words.

"When I shift from Arabic to English, I have to study pauses, flow, cadence, timing—comedy is not universal because it really differs from country and from language, and you have to be on top of it when you try to use your comedy with different audience."

Even with these changes, Youssef claims a distinctive voice in the American political comedy spectrum. He's more cynical, he said, "because I come from a place where hope is an exception." And, in spite of increasing signs of nationalism, Youssef still sees hope for the U.S.

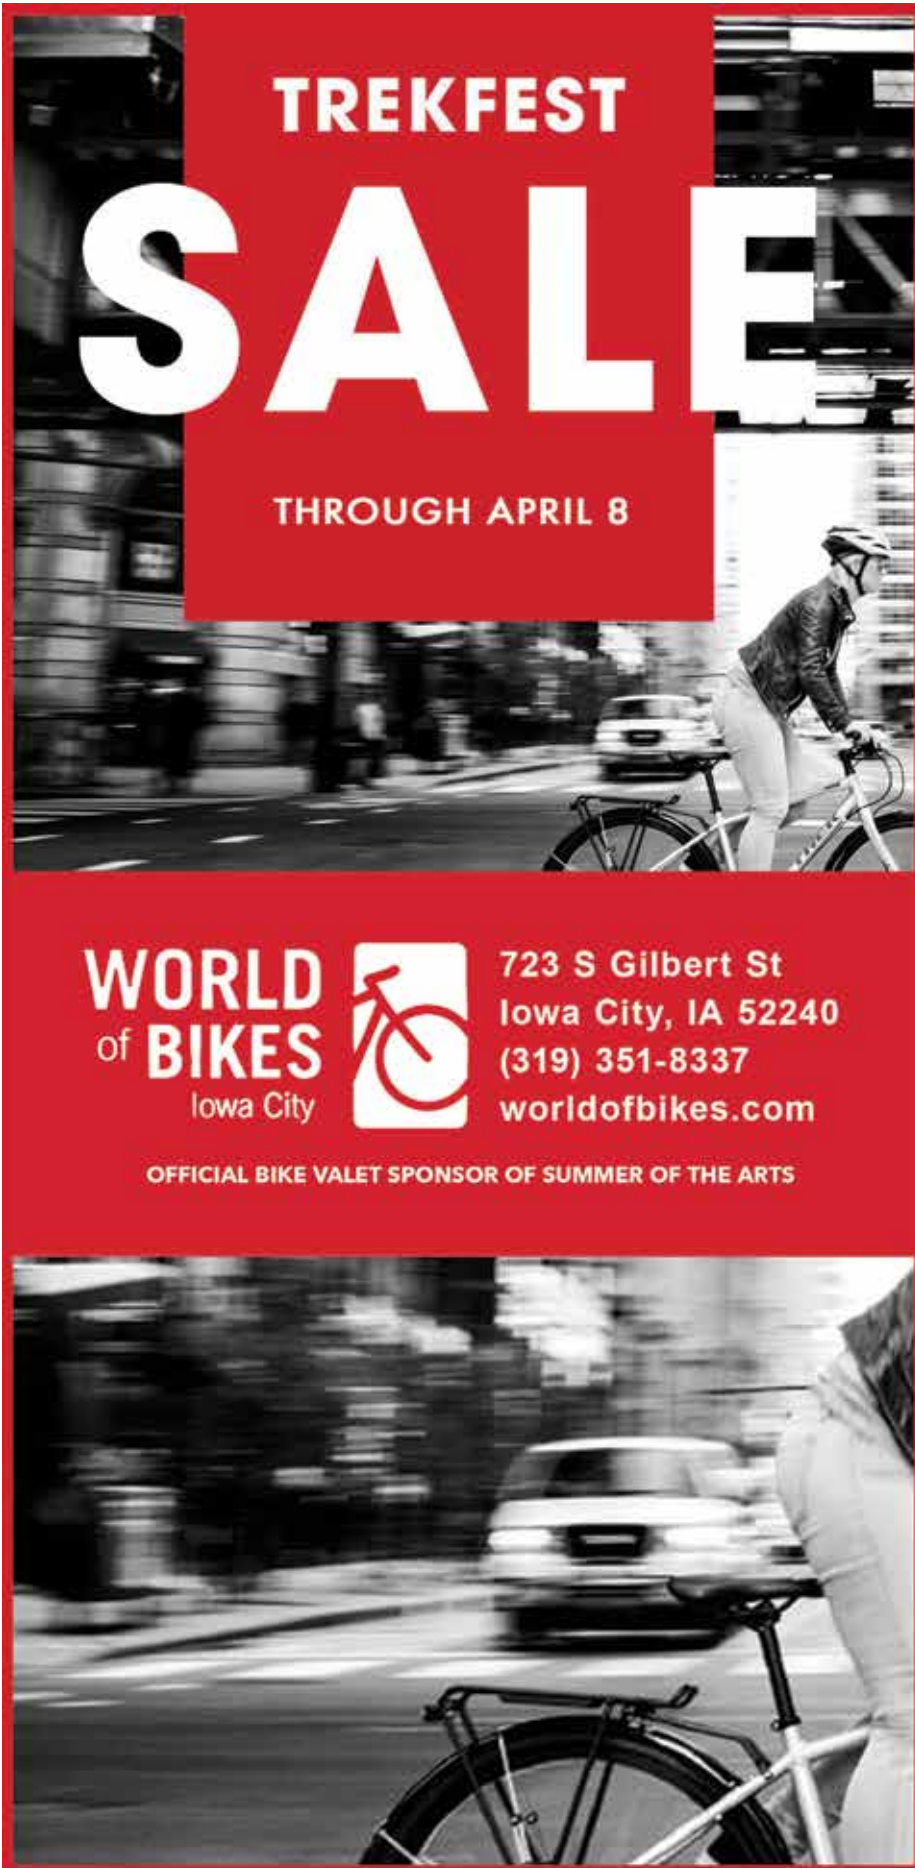

"I don't think things will be that bad here [relative to what Egypt experienced]. There's a chance every couple of years for midterm elections. The good thing is that people are waking up and getting more involved. Red states are turning blue, and Democrats are winning—people are getting more involved. The good thing about America is that it's dynamic and not stagnant."

He also finds that the opportunity for comedy is good. In America, he said, "Comedy has a bigger seat at the table to talk heavy things that would be more difficult [elsewhere]. It helps take the fear out of people's hearts and disarm dictators by making fun of them."

Ultimately, his desire as a comic coincides with his training in medicine: to allow for a kind of healing.

"I would like to have people able to laugh at differences instead of fighting about them. It's a long shot, but something to wish for." LV/

THE STRAIGHT DOPE BY CECIL ADAMS

Why are processed foods bad? If I take a chicken breast and process it into a paste, is it worse for my health than if I ate the chicken whole? Please help before I get butt cancer from a chicken nugget! —Jim Huff

Let's get the bad news out of the way, Jim. Last month a big French study came out that tracked the diets of some 100,000 participants to better understand the relationship between cancer and what its authors refer to as "ultra-processed foods," characterized by "a higher content of total fat, saturated fat and added sugar and salt, along with a lower fibre and vitamin density." And though butt cancer wasn't named as a specific threat, the findings did in fact link a 10 percent proportional increase in consumption of such food with a 10 percent-plus rise in cancer risk overall. Further research is needed, but—brace yourself—it's looking like chicken nuggets may not be amazing for your health.

The good news? Your skepticism regarding any categorical condemnation of "processed foods" is entirely warranted. This reality, in fact, is a big part of the organizing principle underlying the French research—about which more below. Not only is there nothing inherently bad about processed foods, the phrase itself is so capacious and variously defined as to be basically meaningless. Unless you're picking grapes off the vine, you're eating food that's been processed somehow or other: milk is pasteurized; wheat is ground; salad mix is washed. A 2000 article in the British Medical Bulletin defined food processing as "any procedure undergone by food commodities after they have left the primary producer, and before they reach the consumer"—mere refrigeration counts.

That's a distinctly capitalist formulation, but by most definitions, humans have engaged in food processing for millennia. Cooking with fire is the ur-processing method, and our ancestors may have been at it 1.5 million years ago. Other techniques have involved creative ways to unlock nutrition in food or extend its shelf life. In the former category, see e.g. nixtamalization, the practice of treating maize with limestone or lye, which helped the Aztecs and Mayans get more protein and disease-preventing vitamins in their diet. For the latter, see basically any form of fermentation: milk turned into cheese and yogurt is the most widespread, but you've also got Korean kimchi (fermented vegetables), Nigerian ogi (fermented grains) and assorted smelly preserved-fish dishes encountered at high latitudes, including Swedish surströmming, Norwegian rakfisk and "stink-heads," which the Yupik people of Alaska prepare by burying salmon heads in the ground and leaving them to age.

Many methods of fermenting, curing, etc. rely on salt—an extremely consequential ingredient in this realm, particularly prior to refrigeration. But salt took its own place among processed foods early in the 20th century when we began fortifying it with iodine, essential for thyroid function. In coastal regions, iodine in the soil makes its way into the groundwater, but further inland you won't find enough of it occurring naturally, and till the 1920s there was a huge swath of the northern U.S., stretching from the Appalachians to the Cascades—the "goiter belt," they called it—where between a quarter and 70 percent of all kids displayed visibly enlarged thyroids. Just as adding vitamin D to milk took care of our national rickets problem, iodized salt pretty much wiped out goiter, plus some serious developmental disorders also associated with iodine deficiency. It's been floated as one factor behind what's known as the Flynn effect: the three-point-per-decade rise in IQ observed in developed countries over the 20th century.

So yeah, food processing has done a thing or two for humanity. We haven't even touched on the fact that urbanization would have been a hell of a lot harder without food preserved for shipping from the hinterlands, or that the zillion hours of food-prep labor we've saved by not making everything from scratch would have fallen disproportionately on women's shoulders.

Do "processed foods," then, deserve their bad rap? Answer: no, which is something public-health experts are coming around on. The French study discussed above uses a four-category food classification system proposed by Brazilian researchers in 2010 that separates harmless or beneficial food processing from the problematic sort. NOVA, as the scheme's called, distinguishes between unprocessed or minimally processed foods (e.g. meats, plants); processed culinary ingredients (sugar, vegetable oils); processed foods (canned vegetables, cured meats); and, finally, ultra-processed foods, defined as "industrial formulations with five or more and usually many ingredients," including "substances not commonly used in culinary preparations."

And yes, the NOVA authors list "poultry and fish 'nuggets'" in this last group. Again, one thing typifying ultra-processed foods is low nutrient density and high energy density, what with all that added fat and carbs. Those traits are much of (a) the real problem, as far as healthy eating goes, and (b) why Doritos taste so good. But I hope by now you're distinguishing this kind of stuff from your homemade chicken paste, which isn't the kind of processed food you need to worry about. Appealing as it sounds, though, I'm afraid I've got dinner plans. LV/

• AUTHENTIC VINTAGE •

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Eighty-three-year-old author Harlan Ellison has had a long and successful career. In the course of publishing hundreds of literary works in seven different genres, he has won numerous awards. But when he was in his 30s, there was an interruption in the upward arc of his career. The film production company Walt Disney Studios hired him as a writer. During his first day on the job, Roy Disney overheard Ellison joking with a coworker about using Disney characters in an animated pornographic movie. Ellison was fired on the spot. I am by no means predicting a comparable event in your life, Aries. On the contrary. By giving you this heads-up, I'm hoping you'll be scrupulous and adroit in how you act in the early stages of a new project—so scrupulous and adroit that you will sail on to the next stages.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Are you an evolving Taurus or an unevolving Taurus? Are you an aspiring master of gradual, incremental progress or a complacent excuse-maker who secretly welcomes inertia? Will the theme of your next social media post be "The Smart Art of Compromise" or "The Stingy Glory of Stubbornness"? I'm hoping you will opt for the former rather than the latter in each of the three choices I just offered. Your behavior in the coming weeks will be pivotal in your long-term ability to animate your highest self and avoid lapsing into your mediocre self.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you fly in a passenger jet from New York to London, the trip usually takes more than six hours. But on Jan. 8, 2015, a powerful jet stream surging across the North Atlantic reduced that time significantly. With the wind's extra push, several flights completed the trip in five hours and 16 minutes. I suspect you'll have comparable assistance in the course of your upcoming journeys and projects, Gemini. You'll feel like the wind is at your back.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Actor Keanu Reeves' career ascended to a higher level when he appeared as a lead character in the film Speed. It was the first time he had been a headliner in a big-budget production. But he turned down an offer to reprise his starring role in the sequel, Speed 2. Instead, he toured with his grunge band Dogstar and played the role of Hamlet in a production staged by a local theater company in Winnipeg, Manitoba. I admire him for being motivated more by love and passion than by fame and fortune. In my estimation, Cancerian, you face a choice that in some ways resembles Reeves', but in other ways doesn't. You shouldn't automatically assume that what your ego craves is opposed to what your heart yearns for and your soul needs.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A Leo sculptor I know is working on a 40-foot-long statue of a lion. Another Leo friend borrowed $30,000 to build a recording studio in her garage so she can pursue her quixotic dream of a music career. Of my other Leo acquaintances, one is writing a memoir of her time as a black-market orchid smuggler, another just did four skydives in three days and another embarked on a long-postponed pilgrimage to Slovenia, land of her ancestors. What about you? Are there any breathtaking challenges or smart gambles you're considering? I trust you can surf the same astrological wave.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): How sexy is it possible for you to be? I'm referring to authentic soul-stirring sexiness, not the contrived, glitzy, counterfeit version. I'm alluding to the irresistible magnetism that wells up in you when you tap into your core self and summon a reverent devotion to your life's mission. However sexy it is possible for you to be, Virgo, I suggest you unleash that magic in the coming weeks. It's the most reliable strategy for attracting the spiritual experiences and material resources and psychological support you need.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): According to my analysis of the cosmic omens, your impact is rising. You're gaining influence.

More people are tuning in to what you have to offer. And yet your stress levels also seem to be increasing. Why is that? Do you assume that having more power requires you to endure higher tension? Do you unconsciously believe that being more worried is the price of being more responsible? If so, banish that nonsense. The truth is this: The best way to manage your growing clout is to relax into it. The best way to express your growing clout is to relax into it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The immediate future will challenge you to revisit several fundamental Scorpio struggles. For best results, welcome these seeming intrusions as blessings and opportunities, and follow these guidelines: 1. Your control over external circumstances will increase in direct proportion to your control over your inner demons. 2. Your ability to do what you want will thrive to the degree that you stop focusing on what you don't want. 3. Your skill at regulating and triumphing over chaos will be invincible if you're not engrossed in blaming others.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): I'm about to say things that sound extraordinary. And it's possible that they are in fact a bit overblown. But even if that's the case, I trust that there is a core of truth in them. So rejoice in their oracular radiance. First, if you have been hoping for a miracle cure, the next four weeks will be a time when you're more likely than usual to find it or generate it. Second, if you have fantasized about getting help to address a seemingly irremediable problem, asking aggressively for that help now will lead to at least a partial fix. Third, if you have wondered whether you could ever retrieve a lost or missing part of your soul, the odds are more in your favor than they've been in a long time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The French government defines books as an "essential good," along with water, bread and electricity. Would you add anything to that list of life's basics? Companionship? Stories? Deep sleep? Pleasurable exercise and movement? Once you identify your "essential goods," I invite you to raise the level of reverence and care you give them. Take an oath to treat them as holy treasures. Boost your determination and ability to get all you need of their blessings. The coming weeks will be a favorable time to enhance your appreciation of the fundamentals you sometimes take for granted.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Buckingham Palace is the home and office of the Queen of England. It has been the main royal residence since Queen Victoria took the throne in 1837. But in earlier times, the site served other purposes. The 17th-century English lawyer Clement Walker described the building occupying that land as a brothel, a hotbed of "debauchery." Before that the space was a mulberry garden where silkworms turned mulberry leaves into raw material for silk fabrics. I see the potential for an almost equally dramatic transformation of a certain place in your life, Aquarius. Start dreaming and scheming about the possibilities.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Poet Carolyn Forché is a role model for how to leave one's comfort zone. In her early career, she earned writing degrees at placid universities near her childhood home in the American Midwest. Her first book mined material about her family; its first poem is addressed to her grandmother. But then she relocated to El Salvador, where she served as a human rights advocate during that country's civil war. Later she lived and wrote in Lebanon at the height of its political strife. Her drive to expand her range of experience invigorated her poetry and widened her audience. Would you consider drawing inspiration from Forché in the coming weeks and months, Pisces? I don't necessarily recommend quite so dramatic a departure for you, but even a mild version will be well rewarded. LV

Dennis James and Lauryn Shapter are an Iowan roots/country duo who tour constantly around the middle of the United States.

Their music is based in the folk tradition that wouldn't seem novel 50 years ago.

Their hundreds of live shows are etched into every moment of their second album, Midnight And The Pale, due out April 13. The performances, both vocal and instrumental, are relaxed and deft. The guitars, fiddle and spare drumming outline the vocals minimally. The piano that anchors "Witness" comes as a shock after the first three sparsely arranged songs. Shapter's tone is light and almost sly on that track, singing "I don't need you to sweep up my spectacular mistakes" with a combination of self-deprecation and vulnerability.

The standout track is "Pretty," which is a tale of madness and toxic patriarchy: "... pretty girls don't yell, and pretty girls don't cry." The irony of the lyric cuts deep, presented as it is with a simple melody in Shapter's airy, sweet voice. The delicate xylophone in the background cuts like a razor, and the background vocals are pretty and menacing at the same time.

Dennis James, on "A Hundred Miles," is by contrast earnest and straightforward. "I chased a sorrow down a gravel road on my hands and knees," he sings. His songwriting is more conventionally country than Shapter's; you can imagine Tim McGraw getting a radio hit out of this song.

You can also imagine Tim McGraw going over the top and pushing it into bathos. Which illustrates what Society of Broken souls uniquely bring to this music; they give the songs their due and not a bit more. They recorded all the parts of this album themselves, but the overdubbed additions never overpower their core performances as a duo. Midnight And The Pale is restrained and modest, but in the end feels quietly epic. If that's a paradox, well, who doesn't love a good paradox?

MCF: Community Day Underground Showcase w/ the Spider Magnets, Cherry Tops, the Backlund, Contentious, Teenage Bigfoot, Black Belt Eagle Scout, Closet Witch Gabe's, Saturday, April 7, 1 p.m., Free

The Cherry Tops, on their debut disc, <3 <3 <3, which dropped last year, have a delightfully unapologetic early '60s vibe, fast and funny and full of joy. The seasalt lyrics (antagonistic in the would they want to be, when there's a world of froth from half a century ago that's been lying dormant for too long?

Singer Kyle Anthony is the glue that connects this '60s throwback to the modern era. With echoes of Spike Slawson's Me First and the Gimme Gimme's tonality, Anthony nevertheless manages absolute sincerity. He's got sass in his voice, no doubt—but he's never tongue-in-cheek. The album closer, a cover of the tune "Let's Twist Again" (a hit for Chuck Berry in 1961), is delivered with loving reverence.

The fast-paced album's strongest moments are track four, "Game Show Geek," and track five, "What's Up." "Game Show Geek," one of the longer tracks (coming in at a whole 1:24) dances around with clever lyrics and references ("I'll be yours tonight/if the price is right") and offers some of the more interesting of the deliberately simple musical settings. "What's Up" (at 1:48, the longest offering) is timeless. It could just as easily have been written in 1960 as in 2017, and it's utterly serious and sweet.

This is a cotton candy record in flavor and weight, but it's not the least bit saccharine. It's cotton candy you can keep enjoying for as long as you'd like, without a hint of a stomach ache. The musicians are having pure fun and bringing the listener along with them. "I like to stay up late/I like to make up stupid songs," sings Anthony on "Eighty." "Is that so wrong?" LV/
